OHSU's Center for Diversity & Multicultural Affairs will host a panel discussion on mental health issues affecting the African American community. Experiences of mental illness vary across cultures, thus there is a need for improved cultural awareness and competence in the delivery of care. Research indicates that African Americans in the US are less likely to receive accurate diagnoses, adequate treatment and/or seek treatment from a traditional healthcare provider. Faculty, staff, and students are encouraged to attend and learn about culturally-responsive care and services available through OHSU's Avel Gordly Center for Healing.
