

Dr. Jamie Warren is an Assistant Professor of Pediatrics and serves as the Rotation Director for residents and students who rotate through the NICU at Oregon Health & Science University. She completed her Pediatric Residency and Neonatal-Perinatal medicine fellowship at OHSU.

Dr. Warren obtained her Master of Public Health degree with a concentration in Global Health from OHSU during her fellowship, and her research focus since fellowship has been in neonatal global health. Projects have included an epidemiological survey in the Loreto Province of Peru to discover neonatal and perinatal mortality rates as well as risk factors and causes of neonatal and perinatal death; use of plastic bags to prevent hypothermia in preterm and low birth weight infants in Lusaka, Zambia; and a needs assessment of neonatal care services in Cartagena, Colombia. As the resident and student Education Director in the NICU, Jamie is working to develop an educational curriculum to best fit the needs of residents and students who spend time in the NICU.
