The title “patient advocate” can sometimes be confusing for both patient and providers who have expectations around this title—leaving each at times feeling disappointed and at other times supported. Patient advocacy is less about speaking and more about listening, less about aligning and more about staying neutral, less about making someone satisfied and more about doing the right thing.