Residency Chiefs Named

Alicia Overstreet Galeano, MD, will serve as the 2014-15 Chief Resident. She has been with Gabriel Park since beginning her residency in 2011.

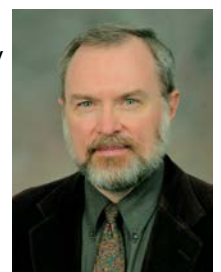

Dr. Overstreet Galeano spent her first 10 years in Nicaragua before she and her family moved to Eastern Tennessee where she lived until moving to North Carolina to attend Duke University for her undergraduate studies. She worked at Duke University with the Children's Environmental Health Initiative for nearly 10 years before starting medical school at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine. She is committed to health care both in the U.S. and internationally. Read more

State of the Department 2014

By John Saultz, MD

The state of our department is strong. We are in a healthy financial position and are now ranked nationally in the top 10 family medicine programs according to multiple rating systems. We are ranked fourth by US News and World Report. We are second in the nation in the percent of students entering family medicine, and we are 8th nationally in NIH research funding. Read more

Frontiers of Health Care: A Blog to Disseminate Real-Time Research Findings

By Sonja Likumahuwa, MID, MPH; Jill Arkind, MPH; Erika Cottrell, MPA; and Heather Angier, MPH

Traditional strategies for disseminating research results (i.e., conference presentations and peer-reviewed journal articles) can take years to be published and have limited audiences. This has led to an enormous gap between health care quality knowledge and policy and practice implementation. While peer-reviewed publications will never be completely replaced, 'alternative' communication strategies are needed to reach new audiences in real-time. The Department of Family Medicine is using several alternative communication strategies (e.g., blog posts, tweets). This article will highlight one such strategy, The Frontiers of Health Care blog Read more
